FRANCIS LIEBER [1798–1872] was a prominent political philosopher and who helped lay the foundation for the study of political science in the United States. A Prussian scholar and political activist who suffered persecution from the Prussians, he published studies on economics, statistics, education and penal reform and produced and edited the Encyclopedia America, the first work of its kind published in the United States. He became professor of history and political economy at South Carolina College, and was later appointed to the same chair at Columbia College. In 1865 he moved to Columbia Law School, where he was renowned for his contributions. His writings on military law were also influential.

New Paths of the Law
First Lectures in the Roscoe Pound Lectureship Series

ROSCEO POUND [1870–1964] was a pre-eminent legal educator and prolific author of influential writings on law. He was a law professor, dean of Harvard Law School and in his later years taught all over the world.
This important work appeared fifteen years after Sidney’s execution for treason in 1683. A reply to Filmer’s Patriarcha, the Discourses is one of the earliest modern statements of republican ideals. He proposes a doctrine of natural justice and governmental order from which all institutions vary at their peril. More important, Sidney asserts that a king’s authority is granted by parliament, which has the additional power to depose him, indeed a controversial idea during the Restoration period. Thomas Jefferson, one of several individuals influenced by this text, described it as “...probably the best elementary book of the principles of government, as founded in natural right which has ever been published in any language; and it is much to be desired in such a government as ours that it should be put into the hands of our youth as soon as their minds are sufficiently matured for that branch of study.” (Sowerby, Catalogue of the Library of Thomas Jefferson, III:12).

ALGERNON SIDNEY [1622–1683] was beheaded by Charles II in part for his involvement in the Rye House plot. One of the other charges against him was that he had committed treasonable libel in this work, which was still in manuscript at that time.

Written in the wake of the Napoleonic Wars and the Congress of Vienna, the Vocation proposed a common legal code for the newly liberated German states, and attacked Thibaut’s advocacy of a code based on natural law. Though he aimed in part to improve the administration of justice, Frederick Charles von Savigny [1779-1861], a founder of the influential “historical school” of jurisprudence hoped that a common legal system would serve a larger goal: the promotion of a spirit of unity among Germans.
